NEW SETTINGS AND ALLIES: THE WORKPLACE RESPONSE TO IPV PARTNERING WITH UNIONS AND EMPLOYERS
2012

- The Canadian Labour Congress (CLC) held a meeting with affiliates to learn about the Australian experience from Ludo McFerran of the Australian Domestic and Family Violence Clearinghouse & Barb MacQuarrie of CREVAWC.
- A small working group was struck to explore the feasibility of replicating the research in Canada.
- Agreement to work with researchers at Western University.
- OBJECTIVE: To survey Canadian workers regarding their experiences with domestic violence in the workplace.
- TARGET RESPONDENTS: Union members and other workers age 15 and up, in all regions of Canada. Men and women will be encouraged to fill out the survey.
ROLES

• Academic Advisor: Dr. Nadine Wathen, Faculty of Information & Media Studies and co-lead of the international PreVAiL (Preventing Violence Across the Lifespan) Research Network (www.PreVAiLResearch.ca).

• CREVAWC & Dr. Wathen set up an online survey, secured ethics approval, analysed the data and collaborated with the CLC on a report to summarize the findings.

• The CLC and its affiliates, labour councils and provincial and territorial federations of labour promoted the survey link in workplaces and on social media. The CLC developed material for stewards and other representatives to distribute the survey link in workplaces and internal publications.
TIMELINE

• Fall 2013: Finalized survey language, translated into French, completed ethics approvals, developed promotional tools including poster, business card-sized handout, newsletter text and buttons for website.

• Promoted survey internally to leadership. Affiliates developed own plans for promotion according to organizational priorities and structures.

• December 6, 2013: Survey launched as part of CLC December 6 activities. June 6, 2014: Survey deadline.

• December 6, 2014: Released of report as part of recognition of 25th anniversary of Polytechnique massacre.
BENEFITS FOR THE CLC AND AFFILIATES

• Engages members on an issue that directly affects them
• Demonstrates leadership on the issue of violence against women and promotes partnerships with academic and community organizations
• Used existing resources
• Provide evidence to advocate for legislative changes, develop model language for negotiating workplace supports including paid leave or women’s advocates during collective bargaining
• Enables conversations between union members as per the 'together FAIRNESS WORKS' initiative

At a Glance

- Domestic violence impacts the workplace through losses in output, absences, and productivity. Issues of domestic violence can also increase risk for physical and psychological violence in the workplace.
- The prevalence of employers providing support to victims of domestic violence is similar across many different industries.
- Workplaces have an opportunity to enhance the health and well-being of employees experiencing domestic violence.
- While many workplaces have been proactive in this area, few employers offer training and education.
71 per cent of employers reported experiencing a situation where it was necessary to protect a victim of domestic abuse.

63 per cent of employers reported that they have implemented a domestic violence policy that is either stand-alone or a subset of a broader workplace policy.

The majority of organizations in our survey developed a domestic violence policy to comply with legislation.

Without proper training on policies and procedures to address domestic violence at work, employees and managers may not know how to react or where to find resources or support if they become aware of a situation.

Domestic Violence at Work - Can Work Be Safe When Home Isn’t?

Thursday December 17 2015
2015-2019/061

On December 1st, 2015, Sister Diane Mitchell and I had the opportunity to attend the launch of the Domestic Violence at Work Resource Centre, a Canadian Labour Congress initiative. Many representatives from various unions and Members of Parliament from different political parties were also in attendance.

"I lied about injury and absence due to fear and not able to admit to abuse at that time."

A voice from the CLC survey

Domestic violence is defined as any form of physical, sexual, emotional or psychological abuse, including financial control, stalking and harassment. It occurs between opposite or same-sex intimate partners, who may or may not be married, common law, or living together. It can also continue to happen after a relationship has ended.

According to a survey published on the Canadian Labour Congress site, many workers are overwhelmed dealing with domestic violence issues at work, and our employers and governments do not offer enough financial and legislative support to help them.

- Over half (53.5%) of those reporting DV experiences indicated that at least one type of abusive act occurred at or near the workplace.
- Overall, 81.3% of those experiencing DV reported that it negatively affected their work performance.

This site canadianlabour.ca/issues-research/domestic-violence-work has loads of information and resources to help understand the need to talk about the issue and to seek support.

Please feel free to share this information. It could be very useful to someone near you.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
WESTERN UNIVERSITY
DECEMBER 3, 2013

Western and CLC launch first ever nation-wide workplace survey on domestic violence.

Western University researchers, in partnership with the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC), will launch a national survey on the impact of domestic violence on workers and workplaces, the first-ever survey of its kind in Canada.

The results will provide made-in-Canada findings that will help unions, employers, advocates and governments develop strong public policy, as well as strengthen workplace supports.

The survey will be officially launched on Thursday, December 5 at a special event in Room 1139, Western’s Faculty of Education Building at 11 a.m. A parallel event is scheduled for the same time at Parliament Hill in Ottawa.

"There is very little Canadian data about the scope and impact of domestic violence on workers and workplaces, making it difficult for workers, unions, employers, and governments to make evidence-informed policies and deliver effective services," says Nadine Wathen, a professor at Western’s Faculty of Information and Media Studies, who examines women’s health decision-making in her research. "We do know that having a job helps women leave a violent relationship."

"This survey will help all of us to realize that what happens at home can have a profound impact on what happens at work and it will guide us to see where there are opportunities to keep workers and the whole workplace safe," adds Barb MacQuarrie, Community Director at Western’s Centre for Research and Education on Violence Against Women and Children (CREVAWC).

The survey is online and available in English and French until June 6, 2014. Any worker over the age of 15 is encouraged to complete the survey, whether or not they have personally experienced or witnessed domestic violence. It is completely anonymous and takes 10 to 30 minutes to complete.

CLC, the national voice of the labour movement, represents 3 million Canadian workers. It brings together Canada’s national and international unions along with the provincial and territorial federations of labour and 130 district labour councils.

"Although unions have worked hard to pressure governments to pass workplace violence legislation that offers some protection for workers experiencing violence at home, it is still not enough," says Barbara Dykes, CLC’s Executive Vice President.

"Domestic violence doesn’t stop when a woman leaves for work," says Lisa Martin, the Executive Director of the Canadian Network of Women’s Shelters & Transiton Houses. "And the costs to her workplace, her colleagues can be considerable, not to mention her workplace and colleagues."

One goal of the survey is to raise awareness among employers and workers about the impact of domestic violence, before it is too late.

"It is simply, at the doors of health care services when we see the impact of domestic violence. This survey will help lift the cloud of secrecy linking safety at home and safety at work," says Linda E.依次, the President of the Canadian Federation of Nurses Unions (CFNU).

"Citing the upcoming National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women, Dykes says that the labour movement believes that workplaces in general, including unionized workplaces, still need better paid leave or unpaid leave options to help people deal with all of the effects of domestic violence. This model includes time to deal with legal issues, as well as access to physical, emotional or mental health services.

"December 6th is an occasion to remember young women who lose their lives to gender-based violence. But it is also a time to commit to action," says Dykes. "These are uniquely placed to make a real difference to the lives of workers who may be experiencing violence at home. And that makes work safer, for everyone."

CREVAWC joined Western’s Faculty of Education in 2011. Founded in 1992 as a collaborative venture between Western, Fanshawe College and the London Coordinating Committee to End Women Abuse (a large organization comprised of violence against women service providers), CREVAWC was established in response to a federal study on the problem of violence against women, triggered by the 1989 murder of 14 women at Ecole Polytechnique in Montreal.

"Domestic violence is devastating lives of Canadian women and it is costing Canadian workplaces in lost productivity, absenteeism and turn over," says MacQuarrie. "It’s easy to ignore those facts without evidence. This survey will change that."

SUPPORT Domestic Violence Leave

Unit supports many initiatives to deal with domestic violence as a workplace issue. Within the union, an increasing number of our Locals are negotiating provisions against domestic violence as well as including paid domestic violence leave in collective agreements. Across the country, we are meeting with legislators to encourage passage of paid domestic violence leave. Manitoba was the first jurisdiction to pass this important legislative right.

A resolution was passed at Unifor’s Canadian Council supporting efforts for paid domestic violence leave in all jurisdictions. We have put together a kit to assist local activists which is available for download below.

The Canadian Labour Congress (CLC) launched a resource kit for dealing with domestic violence at work and the prevention of domestic violence. Unifor’s Women’s Advocate program is recognized as a model. We are assisting in the development of the toolkit to help address the issue of paid leave to deal with gender-based violence, including a bargaining guide.

This resource kit can be found here: http://www canadianlabourcongress.ca/womenresearch/domestic-violence-work.

The Women’s Advocate program continues to be an important program for our union and societies around the world. The program’s growth is directly linked to the commitment of local, social leadership and the many new initiatives developed by the women’s department. Please visit the resource kit for more information and downloadable documents.

Federation of Labour Adopts Domestic Violence at Work Leave Policy

ST. JOHN'S - At Executive Council meetings last year, the Newfoundland and Labrador Federation of Labour (NFLF) adopted a 'Domestic Violence at Work' leave policy. This Federation is the St. John's Status of Women Council (SJSWC) in taking a lead role on the issue, which according to President Mary Shortall is a very significant one for the 85,000 NFLF members in the province.

"Many of our affiliates are recognizing the impact of domestic violence in the workplace," Shortall stated. "Many unions are bringing the issue to the collective bargaining table through leave policies, as well as education and awareness programs, and ensuring that there are peer-advisors in the workplace.

The NFLF policy allows employees who are experiencing domestic violence up to 9 days paid leave to deal with issues such as legal appointments, child care arrangements, or other issues which often occur in these situations.

According to the Canadian Labour Congress report, 'Domestic Violence at Work', "Over 60 percent of domestic violence victims report that their work performance was negatively affected. Without support and policies, workers are reluctant to bring the issue to their employers' attention. Absenteeism and poor work performance can leave victims vulnerable in situations in even job loss when trying to deal with issues of domestic violence.

The Federation of Labour has been working with its affiliates and the SJSWC to create legislative change at the provincial level, which would provide paid leave for employees experiencing domestic violence, and a broadened definition of 'workplace violence' in Occupational Health and Safety legislation.

Last month, the SJSWC adopted a similar policy."

Partnership Grants: An Overview

Partnership Grants support formal partnerships between academic researchers, businesses and other partners that will advance knowledge and understanding on critical issues of intellectual, social, economic and cultural significance. By fostering mutual co-operation and sharing of intellectual leadership, the grants allow partners to innovate, build institutional capacity and mobilize research knowledge in accessible ways. The grants may also be used to help establish partner chairs and research centres.
